ber of west side citizens, the city board of education last night decided to build being on the north line of the High school property at Second North street The board did not consider the pro-posed east side High school site, nor the proposed increase of salaries for the teachers of the local schools.

The board did not get into session until late, and for more than an hour the members discussed the style of fence to be placed around the athletic field at the High school. A. G. Giauque was in favor of a portable canvas fence, to be put around the field at times of the complex of the com games and field meets, but this was defeated by a vote of 5 to 5. The same vote defeated the proposal of O. W. Moyle for a high iron fence around the field, and then, by a vote of 7 to 3, the board decided upon the board fence, President James T. Hammond

The board received a letter from Governor William Spry, asking that Salt Lake schools, and the matter was his wife with living as a bigamist with referred to the committee on teachers John P. Schmidt, whom she married wife who tried to commit suicide. and school work.

Employs Many Teachers.

The board gave the Waterloo school children the right to hold an enter-tainment in a nearby hall, where ad-mission will be charged, the entertainment being to raise money for basket-ball suits for the school team.

The following teachers were appointed by the board: Mary Dutton,
Mary Ross, Lois Anderson, Theresa
Stalker, Margaret McConaughy, Mattie Porter, L. J. Wood and Jennie Davis, at salaries ranging from $475 to $850. At the High school the following teachers were named: Lyman L. Daynes, L. Chelles Swift and Katharine S. For-J. Challen Smith and Katherine S. Forrester, and Dorothy Lutes was named for the grade schools.
